Music Lab is a Christ-centered general music class for upper elementary students that invites learners to explore music with depth, creativity, and purpose. Students will build a strong foundation in music theory, including rhythm, melody, notation, and form, while applying these concepts through singing, movement, dancing, and hands-on musical activities.

The class incorporates engaging activities, music literature, listening studies, and creative exploration to enrich understanding and deepen musical expression. Students are encouraged to think critically, collaborate, and express themselves confidently, using music as both an art form and a meaningful response to God's creativity.

Meet the Tutor:

I'm a homeschool mom to four children (ages 12, 10, 7, and 3) with a lifelong passion for teaching. I've been teaching in various capacities throughout my life, and it's something that continues to bring me deep joy and purpose. I studied both music and educational methods in college, which laid a strong foundation for the work I do now. I incorporate Charlotte Mason's gentle, literature-rich philosophy into our homeschool, encouraging curiosity, creativity, and a love of learning. Coming from a musical family, music has always been central to my life—from studying music theory and sight-singing to playing violin and singing in choirs—and I'm especially passionate about integrating music into early childhood education in a joyful, exploratory way. I'm passionate about not just teaching students how music works, but creating an environment in which they fall in love with making music of their own. This will be my fourth year teaching at REACH and I'm so excited for what God has in store!
